Introducing the topic

We can think of our mental health like a bucket filling up with water:

Unhelpful, stressful things are like droplets filling up the bucket.

If too many unhelpful things build up, the bucket can overflow.

Putting helpful, positive things in place can let some "water" out, and prevent it building up again.